PLEASE HELP!!

I'm looking for volunteers from the Yilgarn Community to put their names forward for a 2-hr shift in the SXMCC Canteen over the weekend of 5th and 6th August being for the KTM Kid and Cliffs King of the Cross.

Your help would be very much appreciated and your entry to the event will be free.

This is a super busy time for the Committee and members of the Club as a lot of time, effort & coordination goes into putting on such an event. Putting your hand up to volunteer your time, assists both the Club and the Community, as this event is one of the major annual attractions that brings people into our town.

If you are available & willing to help, please contact me on 0418 921 223.

Thanking you in advance!!

YILGARN HISTORY MUSEUM SOUTHERN CROSS INC.

TIDY TOWN COMPETITION—2017

Recently, on behalf of the Yilgarn Historical Museum, I was given the opportunity of submitting a submission to the Tidy Towns Competition of 2017 by Mr Gary Kenward.

Southern Cross; thanks to the support of the Yilgarn Shire, the farseeing Citizens of the 1970's, Mrs Forrester and Mrs Blythe, Carla, Pauline and Ronice, and, now, our few willing and capable volunteers, has a varied, interesting and well preserved collection of the Pioneering days and the Mining and Agricultural History of Southern Cross, which deserves to be officially recognised, and to have the opportunity of being showcased to the wider community of the State and Country for we have visitors from far and wide.

We were honoured last Tuesday (28 June) to be visited and judged by two ladies responsible for the judging of our Region which includes Toodyay who won the competition in 2016, and Kalgoorlie. It was pleasing to have three of our active volunteers—Albert, Floss and Lance—there to meet and greet the judges.

During the segments of judging that I was fortunate to witness, they interviewed a panel of high school students who were supported my Mrs Angela Panizza—there were some very interesting topics discussed; inspected the Junk Art on display in Rotary Park which was financed by previous Tidy Town winnings—they were very impressed with the imagination and skill that went into the construction of these displays; and finally they inspected the museum.

They were very thorough with their inspection—inside and out—and very in-depth with the many questions they asked. It was an eye opener as to just how thorough and official their inspection was, and to “see” the Museum through their eyes. Which in effect, would be how visitors “see” us.

I feel if we are lucky enough to receive a commendation or even an award, it would be honestly earned. I've always thought of the Southern Cross Community's museum as being impressive and of a State level. From the two judge's positive comments and reactions—I am now sure my thinking is very right. They even bought 10 old bottles (which were double ups and for sale) to use as table settings at the Award's dinner later this year! Hopefully our Museum might get a mention!

Thank you again to Gary for affording the Yilgarn Historical Museum the opportunity of “showing its colours”.

YILGARN HISTORY MUSEUM SOUTHERN CROSS INC.

A man needs two legs

This is a true story of the Moran family, who worked a pastoral lease at Mangowine to the north of Merredin in the early years. In those days the closest hospital and doctor was at Southern Cross, and in 1905 James Moran was admitted to hospital suffering from two broken legs. One leg had turned gangrenous and the poison was pervading his body.

He lay sweating on the iron bed, bare to the waist. A steel cage prevented the blanket from touching his legs. The gangrene smelt like death as the tissue rotted away, the leg blackish brown leached juices onto the bedding. Stench seeped into every nook and cranny and its foulness could not be escaped. Other patients pulled blankets over their heads in unsuccessful endeavours to escape the revolting smell.

The nurses put cinnamon oil on their masks to help stifle the disgusting odour. They were responsible for bathing the patient in cooling water, before retreating from the foulness. The nurses were also responsible for removing the damaged and infected tissue to help the healing potential. They were of hardy stock but had to regularly step back to hold their gag reflex in check.

James Moran was of fine physique after years of hard work. His good looks and quiet politeness, even when in pain, endeared him to hospital staff. Those who nursed him suffered pangs of guilt for their attempts to escape the revolting smell. They made the effort to linger a little longer when tending him. Doctor Humphrey warned Jimmy that he would die if he did not have the leg amputated. Jimmy refused. 'The longer you refuse the higher up the leg I will need to take off. Amputation will save your life. I will do it in the next hour. Just say so. There will be no pain as I will use chloroform and you will feel nothing during the operation.'

Jimmy replied 'I fear no pain but I fear the loss of my leg. A man needs two legs. I will not have it off.' 'Then you will die' replied the doctor. 'And so be it' said Jimmy. The other patients knew Jimmy's death was near. Their collective thoughts 'for Christ's sake just die you poor bastard.'

Soon Elizabeth Moran arrived. She had travelled from Mangowine to Merredin by horse and buggy, and then caught the Express train to Southern Cross to be with her dearest husband. It was a scorching day, the last day of 1905.

The diminutive woman in her early thirties walked down the aisle between the beds in a purposeful manner, without any indication of the terrible smell pervading the ward. The other patients were on death watch and kept the privacy curtain under review.

Doctor Humphrey sensed Elizabeth's approach and greeted her outside the curtain. He informed her of Jamie's condition and his steadfast refusal to have an amputation. The doctor expressed hope that Elizabeth could change his mind.

Elizabeth went to James and the gangrene smell was as bad as she had ever smelt, and she had smelt death in many creatures from camels to snakes. She steeled her nostrils against the stench as she hugged Jimmy and gave him a kiss on his fevered brow, and begged him to have the amputation.

Jimmy was still relatively alert although dosed on an opium mixture. He smiled lovingly at her. 'A man needs two legs to survive in this country. You know that, Lizzie. I will not become a burden on you and the children. Oh so sweet Lizzie, you have given me much happiness and love. More than a man can expect in a lifetime.'

Jimmy was resolute in accepting death. His personal attribute was his physical ability. He was Jimmy Moran the undefeated boxing champion of the bush. The best well sinker in the district, and the provider for Lizzie and their children. In a one-legged state he could no longer box or sink wells or provide for his family. Above all he would not suffer the barbs from those who would question his usefulness. He loved Lizzie and the children too much to allow the shame his worthlessness would bring. - Although he would not distress Lizzie by expressing such thoughts, even on his death bed.

Elizabeth held him close and begged him to have the amputation, saying he was still full of the Irish blarney. Her pleading was to no avail. Jimmy slipped into a drugged repose and she cried as the bacteria thrived in the decayed leg and rapidly invaded his body.

Father Henry Mason attended James just before midnight and intoned the last rites. Shortly it would be New Year's Day.

Elizabeth held Jimmy's hand as the tears streamed down her brown sunburnt face. James woke long enough to turn his head, and bade her goodbye with his eyes. Then the poison swept through him and carried him away.

It was a stifling hot new year's day that prohibited the keeping of dead bodies longer than necessary. A lonely Elizabeth saw James laid to rest mid-morning in a newly dug grave in Southern Cross cemetery. The two grave diggers, who had lowered James in his rough coffin for burial, leaned on their shovels seeking shade from a spindly tree. They were waiting for the service to finish so the grave could be refilled.

Father Mason was in attendance. He had married James and Elizabeth and baptised their two children. After a quiet prayer he helped her into his buggy for her return to Southern Cross, where she booked a room at the Railway Hotel.

She boarded the Kalgoorlie express late that night and was in Merredin before dawn. She remained in the waiting room until there was movement in the town, then retrieved her horse and sulky from the livery stable for the journey back home.

Her horse knew the way and she sat quietly in the buggy. She wept and thought of her dear James, and how things might have been. A man needs two legs.

Elizabeth Moran visited Southern Cross on several occasions in later years. Her son owned the Bohemia mine at Marvel Loch. She felt no need to visit her husband's grave as death was a natural state never fussed over. There was the sadness and that was enough. James lies in grave 45 in the Catholic section.
